Buried Beneath an Avalanche of Ballots.

Great Republican Gains in Almost Every County.

Ohio County is Still in Line and will Likely Stay.

Last year THE REPUBLICAN predicted that the State would go Republican at the next election and Tuesday's battle fully confirms our predictions and the great Republican gains in almost every county show conclusively that Kentucky voters have put the State House Ring and the Frankfort bosses securely in the back ground and the State has been redeemed.

The entire Republican State ticket is elected by a majority of about 18,000. Comparisons are made with the Congressional vote of 1894, by which the state went Republican.

Bradley carries Adair county by 350, a gain of 275.

Bradley carries Allen by 200.

A BORDER OUTLAW'S FATE.

Killing the Notorious Mexican Bandit, Espinosa.

Cowardly Murder of His Guest—After This He Became a Thieving Outlaw—His Career Ended by the Bullet of a Mountaineer.

The death recently, at a ripe old age, of Tom Tobin, one of the most celebrated mountaineers of New Mexico, recalls his killing of the notorious Mexican bandit, Espinosa, in 1864.

Tobin was an Irishman, quick tempered, and a dead shot with a revolver, rifle or the formidable Bowie knife. I knew him well; he was a life-long friend of Kit Carson, L. B. Maxwell, Col. St. Vrain and all the others of the famous coterie of old trappers, pioneers and mountaineers whose names are familiar in the history of the days of the border.

Tobin was a small, wiry man, rather under the average stature, as was his famous compeer, Carson. He was a brave personified, as quick as an antelope in all his movements. He would fight at the drop of the hat if insulted, yet he was full of kindness, and never permitted a man to go away from his cabin hungry or in want of money as long as his own purse was full.

At the time of the acquisition by the United States of New Mexico under the stipulations of the Guadalupe-Hidalgo treaty in 1848, there lived on the Conchos river a Mexican named Espinosa, who after a wicked episode in his career developed into a notorious bandit, became the scourge of the country and upon whose head, eventually, the government fixed a price. He resided upon his ancestral hacienda in a sort of barbaric luxurious ease after the manner of his compeers in that enigmatical country of the Aztecs. His wealth consisted of sheep, cattle and horses, with a host of semi-serfs, called peons—a custom long since abolished by the government.

In 1848, almost immediately after the ratification of the treaty by the United States senate, Espinosa made the acquaintance of an adventurous American, who with hundreds of others had been followers of the army in the Mexican war, or had emigrated from the states to seek their fortunes in the newly acquired but wonderfully over-rated territory. The Mexican don and this American adventurer became fast friends apparently; the latter, upon earnest solicitation, making his home with the former, at his beautiful ranch in the mountains. There was living with her brother, Don Espinosa, at the time, a dark-eyed, bewitchingly beautiful young girl, about seventeen years old, with whom the too susceptible American fell desperately in love. His affection was reciprocated by the maiden in a degree possibly only to the class from which she sprung—deep, passionate and earnest. This fascinating young American had brought with him from his own home in one of the New England states a large amount of coin in gold and silver, and very foolishly making the Mexican his confidant, told him of his wealth. One night, after the American had retired to his room adjoining that of his host, he was surprised in a short time by discovering a man standing over him, whose hand had already grasped the buckskin bag lying under his pillow, containing a large amount of his gold and silver. He sprang from his couch and fired his pistol at random in the darkness. Don Espinosa, for it was he, being slightly wounded, either enraged or frightened, stabbed with his stiletto the young man whom he had invited to his house as his guest, the blade entering the heart, killing him almost instantly.

The report of the American's pistol-shot awakened the other members of the household, who came rushing into the chamber just as the Mexican's victim was breathing his last. Among them was the sister of Espinosa, who, throwing herself upon the dead body of her lover, poured forth bitter curses upon her brother for his deed. Espinosa saw at once the terrible position in which he had placed himself, and then there evidently determined to become an outlaw in fact, as he could frame no excuse or think of any palliation for his awful act. He therefore hid himself in the recesses of the mountains near his home, carrying with him his ill-gotten gain containing the American's money.

Several years passed before the voluntary bandit could gather around him a sufficient number of outlaws and refugees from justice to enable him by force of strength to defy the authority of law. When he had succeeded in this and surrounded himself with a band of desperadoes and cut-throats, who clung to his standard of crime, he became the terror of the whole region of New Mexico. He made his headquarters in the almost inaccessible fastnesses of the Sangre de Christo range of mountains, from which secure point he made his always successful raids. He robbed the overland coaches, the freight caravans to Santa Fe, and the ranches of the wealthy Mexicans. He stole horses, cattle, sheep, or anything else he could utilize. If murder was necessary to complete his work, he never for a moment hesitated. Kidnaping, too, was one of his favorite pastimes, but he never carried off to his rendezvous any other than the most beautiful of the New Mexican girls. These he kept in his mountain den for ransom, or for a more horrible fate.

Espinosa soon became as dreaded in New Mexico as "Jaquin," the scourge of California. So notoriously did he develop in the number and enormity of his crimes that the government offered a large reward for him, dead or alive. Few were there among the brave mountaineers who dared risk his capture, and for nearly ten years he continued in his deeds of terrible out-lavery. In 1864, however, the intrepid Tom Tobin declared he would get the bandit or lose his own life in the attempt. Tom prepared himself for the desperate work he had in contemplation, and, like the panther, stealthily followed the bandit's footsteps, until at last he cornered him. The old mountaineer, after many ineffectual efforts to track the monster where he could get the drop on him, at last trailed him to a temporary camp in the foothills of the range, where he accidentally discovered in a grove of cottonwood the thin column of smoke that curled upward through the trees from his little camp-fire. He had been on the bandit's trail for several days, and when he found his camp and discovered that there was but one of his followers with him he determined that now was the time to get his man. To capture the two men alive never entered the cautious brain of the old mountaineer; to get them dead was much safer and easier.

When he had gotten within sure distance without having been observed, he crawled Indian-fashion, and, lying behind a friendly log, waited patiently until the bandit chief arose to his feet, when, pulling the trigger of his rifle, Espinosa fell dead, pierced through the heart. A second shot, before the other bandit could recover from his surprise, quickly disposed of him, and the old trapper had accomplished his mission.

To be able to claim the reward offered by the authorities, Tobin had to prove beyond the possibility of a doubt that those he had killed were the dreaded Espinosa and one of his band. So he thought it best to cut off their heads, which he did, and, packing them on his mule in a gunny sack, he took them in to old Fort Massachusetts—afterward Fort Garland. There the ghastly heads were speedily recognized, but whether Tom ever got the reward I am in doubt.—Detroit Free Press.

HOUSES AT FORTY MILE.

Are Built of Logs and Moss and Keep Out the Intense Cold.

Capt. George W. Morgan, of Forty Mile Post, in a recent communication to the Alaska News, predicts that the wonderful Yukon district, which has been developing rich ores, will be found to be particularly rich in coal. Pelly river, which flows into the Lewis at old Fort Selkirk and forms the headwaters of the Yukon, has been prospected more or less for several years with fair success, especially the bars.

The town of Forty Mile, in latitude sixty-four degrees, twenty-five minutes, five seconds, and longitude one hundred and forty degrees, thirty-one minutes, seven seconds, is situated on an island at the mouth of Forty Mile creek, where the creek empties into the Yukon. The town is on the west bank of the Yukon, and is in the Northwest territory twenty-three and one-half miles from the Alaska line, and thirty-nine miles to the line by going down the Yukon to Boundary creek. It has now one hundred and twenty-one houses, most of them being cabins built of logs, but very comfortable. The first round of logs is put solidly on the ground, and on top of each succeeding round of logs, after they have been hewn or straightened, there is laid a heavy coating of moss. When the next round is notched it is put in place on top of the moss, and so on until the top is reached. Then poles are put in for the roof, moss is laid on top of them, and over the moss is thrown mud or dirt. As the heavy weight settles the moss is pressed and makes the cracks between the logs airtight. The windows are put in double, thus forming a space for dead air which keeps the frost out. Old prospectors say that these are the very best houses that can be built to keep their inmates warm. At present there are at Forty Mile one store, one hotel, two restaurants, one bakery, three saloons, a small brewery and one blacksmith and tin shop. The supply of bachelors is large.

MENTAL TELEGRAPHY DID IT.

A Somnambulist Finds His Wife Alive in Her Coffin.

A strange psychological phenomenon is puzzling the residents of McDonald, a small settlement in Pennsylvania. Thomas Wilcox came to that place from St. Louis several years ago and purchased a farm. Mrs. Wilcox's health was not very good, but the couple were remarkably devoted to each other. Wilcox is a somnambulist, and oftentimes at night his wife would dream of a certain spot or place, and he, as under influences beyond his control, would arise and go to the scene if it was near by. He could never give any explanation of this action and was apparently much surprised when he awoke.

During a recent thunder shower lightning struck the Wilcox house and passed through the room in which Mrs. Wilcox was sitting. Though no marks of the fluid could be found on her person, says the St. Louis Republic, she had been struck and the result proved apparently fatal. Her husband was prostrated with grief and refused to believe her dead, saying he felt continually as if she were calling him. He insisted that life still remained in the body, and the corpse was kept for burial four days. Then the friends insisted on a funeral, and the remains were laid to rest. After the services, Wilcox, who had passed three sleepless nights, fell into an exhausted slumber, in which his friends left him.

Shortly after midnight he entered a somnambulist state, and, arising from the couch, went to a shed, where he procured a spade. Then he made his way to the cemetery, a distance of a quarter of a mile, where he began frantically digging at his wife's grave. The earth was loose and it did not require much labor. As he neared the casket the nervous tension increased, and, dropping his spade, he began digging with both hands. When the outer covering of the box was removed, with superhuman strength he wrenched loose the cover of the coffin, and, placing his arms around the body, raised it to a sitting posture. There was a faint gasp, the corpse opened its eyes, gave an ear-piercing shriek, and fell heavily back into the casket. The shriek awoke Wilcox, and he found himself standing in an open grave over the body of his wife. The ends of his fingers were raw and bleeding, where he had scraped the soil from the casket. There was the rustle of a piece of cloth and then it dawned upon him that his wife was alive. Quickly he carried her to a neighboring farmhouse, where the frightened inmates administered such restoratives as they had at hand.

When Mrs. Wilcox was sufficiently recovered she said the last she remembered was sitting in a chair in the room of her house until she was awakened by an oppressive effort to breathe. Trying to raise her hand it came in contact with the coffin lid, and then the awful thought flashed over her that she was buried alive. In that one moment of supreme agony she concentrated all her efforts, and made one great mental call on her husband for help and fainted away. Mr. Wilcox remembers nothing of the occurrence from the time he retired until he found himself standing in his wife's grave.

Physicians say the electric bolt stunned but did not kill, though the trance was so like death as to be indistinguishable. They claim that the resurrection was the result of mental telegraphy, the thought of the wife impressing itself upon the mind of the husband.

BE CAREFUL OF YOUR CARD.

Its Premissious Distribution May Lead You Into Trouble.

A new sort of swindler has arrived and seems to be doing quite well. He is remarkably well dressed, and meets his victim in swagger restaurants and cafes. He is embarrassed at the loss of his pocketbook. Expensively gotten up, with a diamond or two for show, says the New York World, he asks for the loan of fifty cents. "It's embarrassing, but in such a fix."

The man approached generally gives up the money, as much, perhaps, to get rid of the fellow as for any other reason. "Would the lender give the borrower his card? He'd like to send the money in the morning," "Certainly," and with many protestations of thanks the fraud takes it and disappears.

Later in the day, when he arrives home, the obliging man prepares to dress for dinner, but can't find his evening garb. He inquires, and learns that a well-dressed gentleman had presented a card. The card has a request that the dress suit be given to the bearer. It was the pasteboard he had given the fraud, who had penciled the request himself.

Sometimes the request is changed, and the scamp is allowed to "look for an umbrella he left in my room." Anything he can find of value he appropriates.

When the children drink bad water and eat too much green fruit, or have the stomachache or diarrhoea from any cause, you needn't be alarmed about them. If you will get a 25c or 50c bottle of Dr. Bell's Anti-Pile they will be at play in half hour after the first dose. Z. Wayne Griffin & Bro.

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

The fac-simile signature of Dr. H. Pitcher is on every wrapper.

BIG PROFITS Small Investments.

Returning property will make many rich, but no where can they make so much within a short time as by successful Speculation in Grain, Provision and Stock.

$10.00 FOR EACH DOLLAR invested can be made by our Systematic Plan of Speculation originated by us. All successful speculators operate on a regular system. It is a well known fact that there are thousands of men in all parts of the United States who, by systematic trading through Chicago brokers, make large amounts every year, ranging from a few thousand dollars for the man who invests a hundred or two hundred dollars up to $50,000, to $100,000 or more by those who invest a few thousand.

It is also a fact that those who make the largest profits from comparatively small investments on this plan are persons who live away from Chicago and invest through brokers who thoroughly understand systematic trading. Our plan does not risk the whole amount invested on any trade, but covers both sides, so that whether the market rises or falls it brings a steady profit that piles up anonymously in a short time.

WRITE FOR CONVINCING PROOFS, also our Manual on successful speculation and our Daily Market Report, full of money making pointers ALL FREE. Our Manual explains margin trading fully. Highest references in regard to our standing and success.
